“The Massachusetts High Technology Council’s Women in Leadership Initiative is a strong example of impactful collaboration among leaders from Massachusetts businesses, professional services and academic centers. Its ‘leaders helping leaders’ model to identify and expand effective employer practices presents a uniquely promising opportunity for employers to participate in helping solve an important challenge: closing the leadership gap between men and women in the workplace, and I encourage organizations across the Commonwealth to participate in this initiative.”

— Massachusetts Lt. Governor Karyn Polito

About the Mass. High Tech Council's Women in Leadership Initiative:

Massachusetts has one of the highest concentrations of high technology employment in the country and a uniquely diverse base of established and emerging technology clusters. Improving opportunities for women to thrive and advance into leadership roles in organizations that drive our economy is a priority.

In 2018, the Council's Board of Directors launched this program to guide successful efforts in recruiting, retaining, and promoting women into leadership responsibilities across our organizations. Our development team agreed on a process of building a menu of specific practices and/or recommendations in the following categories:

- Data, framing the business case and measuring success
- Best employee recruiting, retaining, and promoting practices
- Workplace culture, organization’s leadership engagement
- Off-the-record “Best Practice” roundtable discussions
